Message From The Chief Diversity Officer

Robin Kelley, Ph.D. Chief Diversity Officer

Dear Campus Community,

After a long winter nap, April conjures up images of flowers in bloom and sunshine. The April Diversity Digest acknowledges and celebrates many commemorative observances. This month, we observe the Easter Holiday, Autism Acceptance Month, Arab American Heritage Month, and Sexual Assault Awareness Month to name a few — all of which challenge us to embody the Jesuit values of caring for the whole person.

Sexual Assault Awareness Month invites us to support and care for survivors and challenges us to create a culture rooted in dignity. We should constantly ask ourselves: How do we create a university culture where every person feels safe, welcome, supported, and empowered? How do we live out our mission not only in words but in action?

These important observances force us to not only celebrate an acknowledgment but to move beyond celebration or awareness and toward the authentic embodiment of inclusion and belonging, recognizing, and accompanying diverse groups with different experiences as a strength of our community. We have so much to be grateful for.

This issue of the Diversity Digest highlights the work being done across our campus by students, faculty, and staff. Please enjoy this issue.

In solidarity,

Robin Kelley, Ph.D.

AUTISM AWARENESS

Every April, Autism Awareness Month serves as a time to educate, advocate, and foster greater understanding of autism spectrum disorder (ASD). Originally focused on awareness, the movement has evolved to emphasize acceptance, inclusion, and meaningful support for individuals with autism.

Autism Awareness Month, now often referred to as Autism Acceptance Month, began in April 1970 when the Autism Society launched its first National Autistic Children's Week. This initiative later expanded into a month-long observance dedicated to increasing understanding and advocating for the rights of individuals with autism.

Autism is a neurological condition that affects communication, behavior, and social interaction. It presents differently in each person, making it a spectrum disorder. While some individuals may require significant support, others navigate daily life independently. The goal of Autism Awareness Month is to highlight these diverse experiences and challenge misconceptions surrounding autism.

In recent years, the focus has shifted from mere awareness to genuine acceptance. Organizations, advocates, and self-advocates stress the importance of moving beyond awareness campaigns to ensuring meaningful inclusion in schools, workplaces, and communities. Emphasizing neurodiversity, many seek to promote understanding rather than stigma.

By embracing acceptance and inclusivity, Autism Awareness Month continues to foster a world where individuals with autism can thrive and be valued for their unique perspectives and contributions.

What is Autism Awareness Month?

An annual observance held in April to raise awareness about autism spectrum disorder (ASD). Originally focused on awareness, the movement has evolved to emphasize acceptance, inclusion, and meaningful support for individuals with autism.

When did Autism Awareness Month Start?

Autism Awareness Month, now often referred to as Autism Acceptance Month, began in April 1970 when the Autism Society launched its first National Autistic Children's Week, which later evolved into a month-long observance.

How to Support?

Every April, Autism Awareness Month serves as a time to educate, advocate, and foster greater understanding of autism spectrum disorder (ASD). People can support Autism Awareness Month by engaging in educational initiatives, supporting autisticled organizations, and advocating for policies that promote accessibility and inclusion. Small actions, such as learning from autistic voices, using respectful language, and fostering inclusive environments, contribute to a more accepting society.

Arab-American Heritage Month

April marks Arab-American Heritage Month, a time to celebrate the rich history, culture, and contributions of Arab Americans in the United States. With ancestral roots spanning across 22 countries in the Middle East and North Africa, Arab Americans bring a diversity of traditions, languages, and experiences that have added to shaping American society.

In 2017 Arab American Heritage Month began as a rather small initiative by the Arab America Foundation. However, in April of 2021, President Joe Biden issued a proclamation that recognized Arab-American Heritage Month, he was the first president to ever do so.

Arab Americans have made lasting contributions to the nation's cultural and intellectual landscape. Their influence extends into contemporary movements in academia, film, music, and social justice, reinforcing the importance of inclusion and representation. Despite these achievements, Arab Americans have historically faced challenges, including misrepresentation and discrimination.

DIVERSITY DIGEST

Arab-American Heritage Month serves as an opportunity to amplify their voices, acknowledge their struggles, and educate communities on the richness of Arab culture beyond stereotypes. Celebrating this month is a step toward fostering greater understanding, appreciation, and ally ship.

Gonzaga University's Arabic Program offers elementary and intermediate courses in Modern Standard Arabic, focusing on the language and cultures of the Middle East and North Africa. While the program does not currently offer a major or minor in Arabic, students can enroll in courses such as Arabic 101, 102, 201, and 202. Whether it's exploring the works of Arab-American authors, learning about the history of Arab immigration to the U.S., or attending cultural events, there are many ways to honor and celebrate this diverse community.

Sexual Assault Awareness Month

April marks Sexual Assault Awareness Month (SAAM), a national campaign aimed at increasing public understanding of sexual violence and empowering individuals and communities to take action in prevention and support. Each year, SAAM provides an opportunity to center survivor voices, promote healthy relationships, and foster a culture of consent and respect. The 2025 theme, "Together We Act, United We Change," encourages everyone—students, faculty, staff, and community members—to stand in solidarity and commit to creating safer spaces through education, advocacy, and accountability.

At Gonzaga University, the commitment to a safe, inclusive, and respectful campus is reflected in a range of services and support systems. The Title IX Office plays a central role in responding to and preventing sexual misconduct, offering both confidential and non-confidential resources for students and employees. Those impacted by sexual assault, harassment, dating or domestic violence, or stalking can connect with the Title IX Coordinator by email at titleix@gonzaga.edu or call 509-313-6910. Gonzaga also partners with local organizations like Lutheran Community Services for 24/7 support, and the Health & Counseling Center provides confidential counseling to students. Educational programs, workshops, and events during SAAM further empower the Gonzaga community to actively engage in creating a culture of respect, care, and equity.

World Autism Awareness Day

April 2nd is recognized internationally as World Autism Awareness Day (WAAD). This day is dedicated to understanding, accepting, and supporting individuals on the autism spectrum. First recognized by the United Nations in 2007, this day is not only about awareness but fostering a world where autistic individuals are valued, included, and empowered. Autism is a spectrum disorder, meaning each person experiences it in their way. Some may find it hard to communicate, while others have unique talents in areas like art, music, or math. During WAAD, we focus on the ways we can educate ourselves.

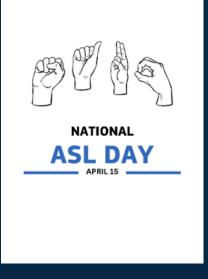

To show support, take part in events drawing awareness to autism, listen to stories, and join the "Light It Up Blue" movement, where buildings and landmarks glow blue in solidarity. This April 2nd, take a moment to listen, learn, and support. Additional resources may be found below.

National ASL Day

National ASL day is celebrated on April 15th each year. On this day we recognize the importance of sign language and support those who in the community are deaf and unable to hear or speak. This day is dates back to the establishment of the first school for the deaf in the U.S. in 1817 located in Hartford Connecticut. This has played a crucial role in the development of ASL. In 1988, students at Gallaudet University (the only university for Deaf and Hard-of-Hearing students) protested to demand a Deaf president for the first time in its history. This movement was successful, and Dr. I. King Jordan became the first Deaf president, marking a major civil rights victory for the Deaf community.

Learning simple phrases such as "hello", "nice to meet you", and " thank you" can help support the deaf community. To learn more, attend ASL events, workshops, or local Deaf meet-ups to show solidarity and discover more about Deaf culture directly from those who have experienced it.

Gonzaga University offers ASL courses. If interested, please contact Dr. Kimberly Weber, Chair of Special Education at the School of Education or check out the resources below:

DIVERSITY DIGEST

OIE PREVENTION TEAM SEXUAL ASSAULT AWARENESS MONTH

Since April is recognized as Sexual Assault Awareness Month, I wanted to take this opportunity to shed light on the prevalence of sexual assault on college campuses. By sharing important statistics and insights, my goal is to help raise awareness and encourage a safer and more supportive environment for everyone in our campus community.

Firstly, how often does sexual assault occur on college campuses? According to statistics from RAINN (Rape, Abuse & Incest National Network), 13% of all students—both graduate and undergraduate—experience rape or sexual assault involving physical force, violence, or incapacitation. The percentage is even higher when looking specifically at undergraduate students, with 26.4% of females and 6.8% of males experiencing sexual assault during their time in college.

It's also important to recognize that stalking is a form of sexual violence that can have serious psychological and emotional effects. In fact, 5.8% of college students report experiencing stalking.

These numbers are significant, yet we rarely hear about incidents on campus unless they are addressed in an official statement. The reality is that the majority of sexual assaults go unreported. But why? While every case is unique, the most common reasons survivors choose not to report include:

"I believed it was a personal matter."

"What if I'm the one who gets in trouble?"

"I don't want them to get in trouble."

"It's not that important to report."

"The police won't help me."

"I reported it, but not to the police." These six reasons alone account for nearly 70% of unreported cases. There are many barriers to reporting, including fear, stigma, and uncertainty about the process, which is why raising awareness and creating a supportive environment for survivors is so critical.

But college campuses are supposed to be safe—so how does this happen?

DIVERSITY DIGEST

A significant factor in many campus sexual assault cases is substance use, often involving alcohol, marijuana, or other drugs. These substances can impair judgment, lower inhibitions, and make individuals more vulnerable. According to the National Sexual Violence Resource Center, in 75% of incidents where the perpetrator voluntarily comes forward, they admit to consuming alcohol before the assault.

While substance use does not cause sexual assault—only perpetrators are responsible for their actions—it is often a contributing factor that increases risk. This underscores the importance of awareness, education, and proactive measures to create a safer campus environment for everyone.

HOW DO WE PREVENT THIS FROM HAPPENING?

Educate yourselves and others! Awareness and education are some of the most powerful tools in preventing sexual violence. Gonzaga's Office of Inclusive Excellence plays a crucial role in educating our campus on gender-based violence, providing resources, and fostering important discussions.

HERE'S HOW YOU CAN MAKE A DIFFERENCE:

- Research topics you don't completely understand, it's ok to not know!
- Attend events focused on awareness and prevention.
- Have open conversations about these issues—silence allows harm to continue.
- Take your friends seriously if they confide in you about an experience. Support and believe them.

Taking the initiative to learn about sexual violence, consent, and bystander intervention can make a huge difference. Educating yourself helps break down misconceptions and empowers you to support others effectively. By working together, educating ourselves, and actively promoting a culture of respect and accountability, we can help create a safer and more informed campus community.

ASK OIE TITLE IX ANYTHING

We know that it can be confusing to understand and navigate Gonzaga's policies and procedures as they relate to Title IX, Harassment and Non-Discrimination, and bias incidents. In the next few Diversity Digest issues, our goal is to provide an in-depth explainer on each process.

WHAT IS TITLE IX?

Title IX is part of the 1972 educational amendments to the 1964 Civil Rights Act and is designed to protect individuals from discrimination based on sex, which means it covers a range of behaviors that can interfere with a person's ability to fully participate in educational programs and activities. These behaviors can include sexual harassment and assault, gender-based harassment, retaliation, and other sex-based discrimination.

Title IX applies to nearly every college and university in the United States because it governs any educational program or activity that receives federal funding. This means that if your institution accepts federal dollars, as Gonzaga does, Title IX applies at the University. Title IX rules and regulations are set by the Department of Education and instruct educational institutions on how they respond to allegations of gender-based harassment and discrimination in university programs.

One of the things Title IX regulations determine is whether a school has jurisdiction, or the authority, to investigate an allegation of gender- based harassment and discrimination. Under the current regulations, the incident must occur within a school program or activity, whether the incident happens on campus, like in a residence hall, or at an off-campus school sponsored event, like an out-of-town basketball game. Another jurisdictional requirement is that the individuals involved in the incident must be enrolled at or employed by the university for the regulations to apply. These requirements ensure that schools are held accountable for actions that occur within their educational activities, while also setting clear boundaries for when the law applies.

DIVERSITY DIGEST

ASK OIE TITLE IX ANYTHING

The Title IX regulations also determine how and when an investigation is initiated, instruct institutions to provide supportive measures, and what the process is for resolving a complaint. Supportive measures are a great tool for institutions. They allow us to implement things like classroom changes, residential accommodations, and other measures to ensure that individuals impacted by gender-based harassment and discrimination get the help they need to keep their academic lives on track, even while going through a Title IX process.

In essence, Title IX isn't just about responding to individual incidents—it is also about fostering an educational environment where discrimination on the basis of sex, whether overt or subtle, is not tolerated. Schools have a legal responsibility to investigate complaints and take appropriate steps to ensure that all members of their community have equal access to educational opportunities. While Gonzaga has a legal responsibility to address complaints, the Title IX Team also genuinely cares about the well-being of the Gonzaga community and strives to facilitate these processes in an equitable and trauma-informed manner.

The Climate Literacy Fellows are paid Gonzaga undergraduates who work for the Climate Institute and visit K-8 classrooms to teach hands-on climate science lessons and this program has been one of the highlights of her work so far.

The Climate Institute is committed to supporting thriving, equitable human societies within flourishing ecological communities by providing regional capacity building, scholarship, and teaching. This commitment to bringing about equitable communities is deeply informed by our Jesuit tradition of care for the planet and a just society. The different areas of work in the Climate Institute including the Climate Literacy Project and the Climate Resilience Project provide opportunities for Gonzaga students to step outside the Gonzaga bubble and authentically experience the Spokane community. Working with other neighborhood and communities within Spokane provides Gonzaga students broader perspectives and appreciation for the strengths and challenges that our neighbors and community experience.

Mornings in Jenin

Book

Mornings in Jenin by Susan Abulhawa is a powerful historical novel that follows four generations of a Palestinian family, the Abulhejas, as they endure displacement, war, and loss from the creation of Israel in 1948 to the early 21st century. Through the eyes of Amal, the story explores themes of identity, love, and resilience amid the Palestinian struggle. Blending personal tragedy with historical events, the novel offers a deeply moving perspective on the human cost of conflict.

AMERICANARAB

Documentary

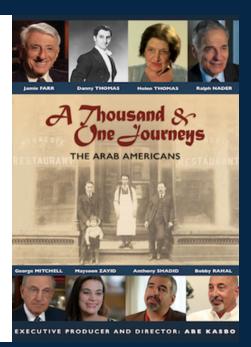

American Arab (2013) is a documentary by Iraqi-American filmmaker Usama Alshaibi that explores the complexities of Arab-American identity in post-9/11 America. Through personal stories and interviews, Alshaibi examines issues of racism, stereotyping, and cultural duality faced by Arab Americans. The film blends his own experiences with those of others navigating their identities in a country that often views them through a lens of fear and misunderstanding. American Arab challenges monolithic portrayals of Arab Americans and highlights the diversity and resilience within the community while questioning what it truly means to be "American."

A Thousand and One Journeys: The Arab Americans

Documentary

A Thousand And One Journeys: The Arab Americans is the untold story of almost 200 years of the contributions of those who immigrated to the United States from the Middle East, North Africa and the Gulf have made to the American fabric. The film discusses the Arab-American immigrant experience through the personal stories of people who immigrated in pursuit of the American Dream. The film explores early and multiple waves of immigration along with the tremendous impact of 9/11 on the Arab American community.

"Ask the Birds in Cairo"

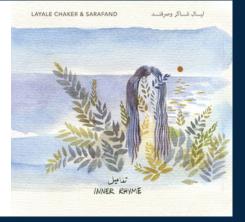

Music

"Ask the Birds in Cairo" by Felukah and MC Bolbol is a beautiful mix of hip-hop, poetry, and Arabic music that celebrates Arab-American heritage. The song explores themes of identity, home, and culture, capturing the feelings of those living between two worlds. With its mix of Arabic and English lyrics, it honors tradition while embracing modern Arab-American music.

"Inner Rhyme"

Music

"Inner Rhyme" by Chaker and Layale is a beautiful mix of traditional Arabic music and modern sounds. The song tells a heartfelt story about identity, connection, and belonging. With its poetic lyrics and emotional melodies, it honors Arab heritage while bringing a fresh, modern touch to the music.

"Be Kind"

Music

"Be Kind" by Zak Abel is an uplifting song about compassion, understanding, and treating others with kindness. As a British-Moroccan artist, Zak Abel's music reflects his diverse background, blending soulful vocals with modern pop and R&B influences. The song's message of empathy and unity resonates with the Arab-American heritage theme by promoting values of respect and cultural appreciation.
