Call for Panel Participants: On Diversity in the Classical Western Tradition

We are pleased to solicit abstracts for a special panel to be held during the 22\textsuperscript{nd} annual meeting of the Ancient Philosophy Society, hosted by Gonzaga University in Spokane, WA. The panel hopes to foster a conversation between faculty and students (both graduate and undergraduate) on the question of how to and what it means to diversify the curriculum and methodologies of teaching and research within the classics. Is it as simple as incorporating the Pythagorean women or the poetry of Sappho or are more radical shifts imaginable? For faculty what methods in your research and teaching have you attempted? What problems/questions/successes/failures have you encountered? For students, what do you hope to see and what imaginable problems or benefits could emerge?

Travel Scholarship for Students: All students whose abstracts are accepted, will be awarded a travel scholarship so they can attend the panel without out-of-pocket expense.

Please submit abstracts to Danielle A. Layne: layne@gonzaga.edu by Dec. 1, 2022. The e-mail accompanying the submission must include name, abstract, e-mail address, institutional affiliation and status as student or faculty. If student, indicate whether graduate or undergraduate and if the former, your area of interest and if the latter, your major.
